

SOUTH TRAIL TIMES

Volume 3 / Issue 8

AUGUST EDITION:

- Brake, Look and Listen

How do you know when your brakes need work? These symptoms may tell you.

- Brake pad wear. On many vehicles, you can inspect your brake pads by bending down and looking through the spaces in the wheel rims. If the outer pad (the piece pressing against the metal rotor) is less than ¼-inch thick, the pads need to be replaced. The longer you put it off, the more you risk causing expensive damage to other parts of the brake system.
- Squealing, screeching, scraping or grinding noises. When your brake pads get thin, a metal wear indicator on the pad emits a high-pitched squeal that lets you know it's time to have your brakes checked (before any damage is done). But if you hear the grinding or scraping sound of metal-on-metal, it could mean you've waited too long and you're damaging the rotors every time you brake. Get to a service station as soon as possible.
- Decreased stopping power. If the brakes are "mushy" or feel like they're sinking to the floor when you press on the pedal, you might have a leak in the air hose or brake fluid line.
- The car vibrates or pulls to one side when braking. While these symptoms have a variety of possible causes, they could indicate warped rotors, uneven wear on the brake pads or other brake-related problems that need to be addressed by a trained mechanic.
