NOVEMBER EDITION:

Driving during Thanksgiving

Best day to leave

Officials tell motorists to plan ahead when traveling for the holiday

Officials urged people to be flexible in choosing when to leave their homes.

“Sunday before Thanksgiving: Leave the Sunday before Thanksgiving at 6 a.m. for a smooth trip,” Google Maps says. “Avoid traveling around 3 p.m. when traffic is at its worst.”

Worst day to leave

“Day before Thanksgiving (Wednesday): If you have to leave on Wednesday, your best bet is to hit the road at 7 a.m. and avoid driving around 3 p.m.,” the company says.

Then again, in a similar analysis ahead of last year’s Thanksgiving, Google Maps showed that the Tuesday before the holiday was the worst day for area traffic between 2012 and 2014, followed by Wednesday.

Best day to return

“The day after Thanksgiving (Friday): If you can leave the day after Thanksgiving, your best bet is to hit the road at 6 a.m. Avoid traveling around 4 p.m. when traffic is at its worst.”

Worst day to return

“The Saturday after Thanksgiving: If you have to return on Saturday, leave by 6 a.m. and avoid traveling around 4 p.m. when traffic is at its worst.”

Google Maps provided some additional advice that it said generally holds in major cities nationwide: “Traffic on the Monday and Tuesday before Thanksgiving is heavier than usual, but the traffic peaks follow the same patterns as normal weekday traffic. If you need to hit the road on Monday or Tuesday, midday is the best time to leave.”

State transportation officials said last year that no matter which day you’re driving, traffic should be lightest in the nighttime after 8 p.m. or in the early morning.
